

The Beginning of Civilization

Mythologies Told True

This six book series is a character driven suis generalis story with unbroken narrative written in crisp, inviting language touched with poetry stripped of ornamentation that explores the fears and desires of flawed everyday people whose lives and exploits, told and retold through the ages, gave rise to our traditions and mythologies and whose accumulated failures and lessons unlearned haunt and bring us to where we are today.

Each book, like life and civilization, grows more complex and conflicted from the simple, predictable first book through the sprawling, multi-storied, multi-generational sixth.

A New Heaven and Earth

Second Edition

Tallstone and the City: Foundation tells the story of two members of the Clan of the Serpent from their birth through their death -- Pumi the stonecutter and Valki the gatherer.

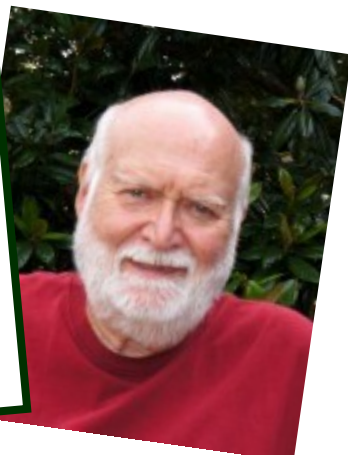

Pumi and Valki, through innocent, altruistic acts of living, create a city, domesticate wheat, establish science, create animal husbandry, and lay the foundation of modern civilization.

They meant no harm.

AUTHOR'S NOTE: Gobekli Tepe is the world's oldest megalithic site. It was built by hunter-gatherers 12,000 years ago and predates agriculture, animal domestication, and settlements. It has no known reason to exist.

Wheat domestication is thought to have occurred within 60 miles of Gobekli Tepe. Sanliurfa, in modern-day Turkey, lays claim to being the world's oldest city. It lies twelve miles from Gobekli Tepe. These facts suggest that the area's history might provide the basis for the Biblical tradition for the Garden of Eden.
